7 deadly sins modern examples

The seven deadly sins have long been in our history and in our media. Everyone grows up learning about them. Everybody knows what they are. Or them? Here are the 7 mortal sins fores mattered to our modern world. What is your sin? Pride – There is nothing wrong with being proud. There's nothing wrong with thinking you're a great person, that the things you do are amazing. But there's a fine line between self-esteem with a sense of accomplishment, and your thinking is better than everyone around you because of it. We live in a world full of self-righteous people who put themselves in a position of superiority. And not just myself. Beliefs, values, culture, race, gender, political stops, fashion, profession, food preferences and anything else related to someone's identity are stuck in hierarchies of better and worse – you can be proud of any of them. Somehow we have fallen into a culture where we tell each other I am right, you are wrong, so I am better and you are stupid/evil/misguided/misguided/delusional/lower class, etc. When you begin to humiliate, avoid, or demonize another person just because they are not in the hands of your highly glorious standards of perfection, it is the sin of pride. The worse part of pride? It often serves as an excuse for any other sin there. Luton – A pack colloquially means pouring food, stereotypically what makes fat people fat in the first place. There is a grain of truth in both, but they are still a distant target (e.g. there may be body tumors that make you fat). Pack consumption is excessive to the point of being wasteful. Until it's harmful. This could be food. This could be gasoline. That could be anything. America is especially guilty of this sin, and it doesn't appreciate how valuable the things it has are. Do people really need a gas car? Should people let the sink work when they brush their teeth? There is no difference between a person who hunts a mountain of food on his plate and another person throws unwanted residues, they have no place in the container. It's still a treat. Sloth – Sloths don't sleep on Sunday mornings because you just feel lazy right now. The sloth is an apat. Many times we walk with our lives, I do not care about other people's problems, because we just do not care. It's not our concern. And no, I don't want you to care about everyone's problem and go out of your way to solve them. Sloths most directly refers to apathy for injustice. To quote Edmund Burke: All it takes for the triumph of evil is that good people do nothing. It's not a cry to say you have to hope for a plane and go stop terrorism in other countries. But what are you doing in your own town? If you see someone harassing, will you step in to stop them? If you see someone who has a difficult Are you trying to dedicate their lives? If you see anything suspicious, will you say something? Or is it none of your business? Lust – the joke of our society. And worst of all, we've become so blinded that what's not passion, love. Lust is addictive. Lust is a desire that others aim for in tools to achieve this desire. Lust can be for power, for knowledge, for money, for blood, for alcohol, for drugs, for whatever. But they all need to be taken with salty grain. A passion for the wrong knowledge can endanger people's lives. The desire for blood can lead to serial killings of maniacs. But for the more basic definition of lust? Today, we live in a world full of lust, where rape has become a culture where infidelity is the second leading cause of divorce - assuming the relationship even reaches a marriage where men and women are used as a tool in advertising to make you want a product more. Even in our media, she has become too familiar with the garment of a person who sexually harasses a girl (or another person) and this has been passed away as romantic. If he's not in the plot, then he's swarming with his fan fiction. Sexual sadism is new. Society has grown to love lust when lust is and will never be true love. Envy – Envy, other than zealous, which is a fear of substitution, is not just to hate other people for what they have. You also hate yourself because he didn't get it. Envy is the embodiment of self-browsing. There are two possible solutions to solve this. The first is to destroy it in the process of receiving it. Envy is a double-edged sword that has become the foundation of capitalist society. Our economy is driven by adversity. If anyone has anything, then you should have it, too, right? It doesn't matter if you don't need it. So you go out and get it, rising to the ranks of society and becoming the object of envy for others to go through contagious cycles. However, if what you envy is not something you can get, then naturally another solution is the second option: destroy that other person and take what is theirs. The easy part? Unlike the previous solution, where you are the one to rise in the hierarchy, this second solution takes others to your level or removes them completely. Have you ever been better? Maybe. But envy is like a parasite. Of all seven mortal sins, envy is the most destructive. He'll eat you until there's nothing left but a shell. You get what you think you want, but it's not out of your hands. Anger – Anger is not anger. Anger is not murder. Rage is rage, irrational and blind, which is uncontrollably infuriated with everything from words to violence to total slaughter. Anger is often an act that drives the sin of hate, but can be as subtle as encouraging someone to hurt another. If we feel in any way, we have to do something, better. This is what can be directed internally or externally. Anger can be the most destructive sin globally. Why? Because that's how wars begin, how the cycle of revenge can last for centuries, how one group of people can so easily demonize others to listen worse. We live in a world where it is so easy to offend others, but in one where we still have biased conclusions from everyone around us. Is there a difference between shouting a disagreement over YouTube that they are leading our world to hell in a different way from how religious fanatics are destroying our country? Do a parent who screams at their child disapprove of their recent choices any differently than telling someone in a different race to get out of your neighborhood? We all have a right and what's wrong with our heads. But when does our need for a perfect world become more important than love and understanding of the people in it? Greed – Greed for money, greed for power, greed for material possessions. Whatever it is, you just need more. There's nothing wrong with asking for things. Money and power are great things to have because of how much you can do with them! The problem arises when their value is obtained more than anything else, and they are not something you intend to share. The greed is that large companies have and risk falling into – to value profit more than the quality of their product or the well-being of their customers and customers. Banks are particularly to blame for this, as one of the key players in the U.S. economic crash. Politicians are to blame for this by working to claim so much ground for their representative party when it may not be what the country needs. The funny thing about greed is a cumulative sin proportional to pre-existing possessions. You have to have a starting point, a kind of familiarity with your desire. A man with little money or power probably won't be as greedy as someone with more. Problem? People with power and money rule this planet. Whatever happens, power is corrupted, and love for money is the root of all evil. I thought it would be interesting to draw the well-known sins in a contemporary interpretation. So I drew it and posted it on my Instagram. What sin do you like?
